The greatest challenge for the Church may also be found in the foundation of what "Church" is supposed to be. Over a hundred times in the New Testament the "one another" statements surface, linked with a command to do something. We're told to pray for one another (Jam. 5:16), or to encourage one another (1 Thess. 4:18; Heb. 10:25; Rom. 1:12), or to accept one another (Rom. 15:7). Many of these "one another" statements are duplicated with "love one another" occurring some 40 times in the New Testament.

The challenge is that the church is expected to implement these statements, and loving, forgiving, offering hospitality to one another is far from an easy task to perform. However, what God intended a church to be is a safe-haven where people can experience his love, his forgiveness, and his hospitality through one another. The "one another" statements makes our faith real, authentic and practical.

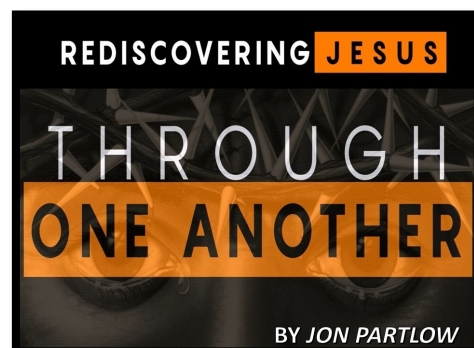

On Sunday we'll begin a sermon series that will flesh out nine of the "one another" statements. When Jamie and I preach through this series we'll have two goals with each sermon. First, we'll flesh out the command portion of the "one another" statement in order to lead us to being closer to the Church God intended. Secondly, we'll root the command in the person of Jesus. Ultimately, the series is not about us, but about Jesus with us learning to live like Jesus. And with only addressing nine "one another" statements, it gives us the chance to revisit them again in the future.
