There Was Once A Little Boy

Once there was a little boy who lived in a rural community with his father, mother and younger brother. This family was not affiliated with any church, and rarely attended religious services of any kind. In the summer, some neighbor children would invite this little boy and his younger brother to go with them to VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL at the church of Christ in the city. "Going to church" was a new and exciting experience for this little third-grade boy, and he would stand at the end of his driveway waiting for the neighbors to come by and pick him up. When the neighbor's station wagon stopped at his house, there would already be several other children in the car who had also been invited to the Bible school. When this little boy first heard the story of Jesus from a sweet, God-fearing woman, and when he first learned of and sang about the preciousness of the B-I-B-L-E, it was a life-molding occurrence. As the week of Bible classes came to a close, this little boy and his brother would plead with their parents to take them to "church" the following Sunday. Sometimes their parents would take them, sometimes not. But the neighbors kept calling each summer for the next few years. And the station wagon would always be filled with eager children. For the little third-grade boy, this week of VBS would be his "church" for the year. The pleading, however, finally paid off. The little boy's mother began attending the services of the church in their rural community each Sunday, and the little boy was able to go to Bible classes. Before very long, the mother obeyed the gospel and became a Christian.

Where are the neighbor children now who invited the little boy and his brother to VBS? They are both faithful members of the church, married, and have children and grandchildren of their own. What became of the parents who picked up countless numbers of neighborhood children and diligently brought them to Bible school? The father became a faithful Elder in that church. What became of the godly woman who first taught that little boy about Jesus? She continued to teach until she was no longer able to do so, and exercised the same good influence over numbers of other little children. The little third-grade boy's mother is still faithful to the Lord, attending the same congregation where she became a Christian. The little boy's brother is a faithful member of the church. And the little boy himself? Well, he became a Christian at age 14, and is preaching for the College View church, where he is trying his best to find other little boys and girls, men and women, who will listen to the story of Jesus.

— Mark White

This is a true story of a family that extended their love for God to those around them. This letter was written back to them in appreciation for their kindness.

The invitation to VBS planted the seed, letting the neighborhood children hear the story of Jesus and showing His love for them. The children grew in the Lord, along with their mother. Later one of the boys became a preacher of The Gospel himself.
